

December 25, 2015

Happy Holidays

From everyone at The Culinary Business Institute, a sincere happy holidays wish, and the hope that 2016 starts off at full speed and only gets better and more positive throughout the year. We'll continue to bring you business education, ideas for your own home based culinary business, and the ever popular Personal Chef Service recipes. You may have noticed that during this past year we've provided a great number of recipes on our blog – this was in direct demand from those who have been following our blog. In 2014 they said they wanted more recipes – and knowing foodies the way we do, we know that all culinary minded people are virtually always on the hunt for another proven recipe. We're happy to assist. For those of you who have been following our blog, and considering your own involvement in a home based culinary business – there's no better time than now to get that mission underway. If your schedule allows you to really dive in, anticipate 60-75 days before you're really seeing results. If your situation does not allow you to dedicate yourself 100% now – why not get started on the business education portion, and be ready to make the switch when that time is right. Either way, 2016 could be the year you finally take that first step. And The Culinary Business Institute will be here to assist – no worries! The Culinary Business Institute strives to provide the most current business data and trends possible. Occasionally a business suggestion or method may be contrary to local or county laws and/or regulations. Please be sure to check your local agencies to insure the procedure or method we may suggest is in fact allowable in your area. 99% of the time our data does meet with local guidelines, but every now and then a local regulation will supersede and alter our business information.

